

"His Terrible Secret," That Is, the Man Monkey's, Goes "The Murders of the Rue Morgue" One Better

But This One Is a Beneficent Gorilla Who Protects the Careless Heroine.

DOESN'T KILL ACTORS.

Has a Gold-Mine Plan Tattooed on His Arm and Nearly Loses the Map.

"HIS TERRIBLE SECRET" is out at the Lincoln Square Theatre. And that's not all. There's "The Man Monkey" for a sub-titled and the protection of Lucy, the careless heroine. It is not always like that. You remember "The Murders of the Rue Morgue" that raised your hair when there was more of it to raise, perhaps, than there is to-day. Well, anyway, your mind naturally goes back to Poe's thriller of the bad gorilla that killed two good ladies in Paris, when you pass into the manager's at Broad-is a very superior article. He talks like a leading man and speaks at length. He looks like the headliner of a dime museum. But don't judge him too quickly. Take your time—there are four acts. Aside from his rich vocabulary, the Man Monkey is the possessor of a job lot of gold mines left him by his father, who evidently wanted to do something to square himself. The map of these mines is tattooed on Melmoth's arm and the villain's love of geography almost causes The Man Monkey to lose his map at one critical point in the play. This awful moment sent such a shudder through Lincoln Square last night that a waiter over at Healy's made a mistake in adding up a check as a result of the shock.

Just to show what he can do The Man Monkey starts in by snatching Lucy from the jaws of a mad dog in the wings. Then he turns his attention to Sir Beverly Brenton, who has made up his mind that Lucy's course of true love with Harry Waring, an American civil engineer, must be blocked. Sir Beverly declares himself in on the game and Salome, the only original Egyptian adventuress, is there to see that there is enough trouble to stock a grand opera. When Salome distracts attention from the main issue by telling Sir Beverly she will make him look like a second-hand target if he gives Lucy the yip part, The Man Monkey tries to straighten out his business by telling a monkey selector that his tattoo marks are as good as a gold mine. The dear old professor admits that this may be true, but he informs his tattooed friend that the papers which determine the ownership of the mines are hidden in the interior of his prize monkey.

Swings the Big Stick. Now, there's a deep plot for you! And watch Sir Beverly go to it! He and his assistant villain, call on the professor as soon as Lucy has taken Melmoth for a walk along the Nile, and when they get through with him the plot has thickened with a murder. Melmoth comes back just in time to be charged with the crime, but when Sir Beverly adds insult to choking by trying to kiss Lucy, all the jungle in The Man Monkey is roused, and, seizing a club, he starts Sir Beverly in the Twenty-third Class.

Well, things go from bad to worse with Melmoth and Lucy, until in the end...

Like a Museum Headliner. For a product of the jungle Melmoth is a very superior article.

RISKED KILLING 20 TO SLAY TWO MEN
